remembered that acts not a seem so clear. With an hereditary right to the throne a powerful prince can certainly work upon the aucient prejudices of a people to a very consideral le extent, and when he is sailiciently strong to commit acts of violence like those we have recorded and go uapunished, there is no telling what his next step may be. Alarms and panics of all sorts prevail in Japan, and foreigners are by no means safe there, although the present Government does all it can to protect them. Perhaps before the present Embassy reach Jeddo, Mito will have raised the standard of civil war, and perhaps he will be master of the country, in which case all our nicely laid plans will be overthrown, and we shall have cast our bread upon thrown, and we shall have east our bread upon the waters, not to be returned to us, even after many days. Now that the Japanese have left the Grand, a battalion of the Grandiers of the Gaard, us, we can begin to calculate if our outlays are likely to be returned in the profits of their trade and good will.

It is nancessary to speak of the importance of Mr. Goodysear's inventions. A worthless product of replical vegetation received through them inestinable value, and became of indispeasable utility. They are introduced throughout the civilized world, and the industries founded aporthem give occupation to thousands, and supply the wanks of millions in the United States, Great Britain, France, and Germany. Some of the most import uses and applications of vulcunized India-rubber were perfected by Mr. Goodysear's in the midst of his useful labors.

An Important Question String.—The Paris correspondent of the New York Express writes a letter, showing the satisfactory settlement, in a very quiet way, of a great American principle of international law, and one to which it has been very dilicult bithers to indice the European continental powers to assent. We refer to the case of one Zeiter, a Frenchman uprinciple of international law, and one to which it has been very dilicult bithers to indice the European continental powers to assent. We refer to the case of one Zeiter, a Frenchman uprinciple of international law, and one to which it has been very dilicult bithers to indice the European continental powers to assent. We refer to the case of one Zeiter, a Frenchman by litrib, but an American citizen by adoption, who, upon revisiting his native town, after severally sears a lastence, was acreated and throw into prison as a deserter—French law holding him just as is liable to military duty now, when an American citizen, as he was before be emigrated to the United States and threw off his allegiance. selves, and they have been held as responsible to military duty, though long absent, as if no emigration had taken place and no new ties of country formed. Thus, if not present to take part in the drawing, a number is selected by one of the functionaries of the recruitment, and if unfavorable the conscript is liable to seizure the moment he towehes French soil and falls into the clutches of the military police.

It was so in the case of Mr. Zeiter. He returned to France a short time ago, and visited his native place. He was recognized, arrested, and thrown into prison, at Weissenberg, as a deserter. An appeal in his behalf was made to the Minister of the United States, who immediately addressed M. Thouvenel, the Emperor's Minister for Foreign Affairs, and claimed the discharge of Zeiter, on the ground that he had become a citizen of the United States, and, owing to no further alle giance to France, could not be forced to perform service in the French army. This conflict of citizenship is not new, but, in this instance, the correspondence has been conducted on a principle different from that previously observed. In past years, numerous demands for protection lave been addressed to successive Ministers of the United States by French naturalized citizens of the Great Republic under circumstances identical with those of Zeiter, in no case has the discharge of the detained individual been claimed as a right, in recognition of the ægis extended by the foreign affair reason for interferine, it has been the usual practice to request the release of the prisoner as a favor, and demands in that form have been a fair reason for interferine, it has been the usual practice to request the release of the prisoner as a favor, and demands in that form have been a fair reason for interferine, it has been the usual practice to request the release of the prisoner as a favor, and demands in that form have been a fair reason for interferine, it has been the usual practice to request the release of the prisoner as a favor, and demands
